Embers of Love - A Billverly Story

All Beverly could think about was that kiss, it had been on her mind ever since she left Derry, and when she got back she was worried about what would happen next.

Beverly's Aunt had recently been offered a job in Derry, a higher paying one at that, rare to find one in such a small town, it was a real stroke of luck (or plot convenience). With her new job came a new house, a quaint house, but big enough for the two of them and a spare room for any guests.

It had been almost a year since the defeat of IT and Henry Bowers was locked in a mental institution, so as far as they new, Derry was a safe place to live.

Aunt Mary Marsh was the complete opposite of her Brother, a kindly, soft spoken therapist who was very open to listen to all of her niece's concerns. Beverly often wondered how her aunt and father were even related. Aunt Mary knew full well of the rumours about her niece spreading around Derry, but also was very aware that these rumours were the results of petty bullies who had no real value in life other than to worsen the life of those around them. Aunt Marsh also knew Bev didn't hang around with other girls that often, that Beverly had found her people and if that was her so called 'Losers Club' then Mary was not going to stand in the way of her niece's happiness just because of social norms.

Beverly, on the other hand was busy stressing over how to reintroduce herself to the Losers after a year of little contact with any of them. She thought about recreating their first meet but decided against it, as robbing a drug store didn't seem like the greatest way of returning, she instead decided to wait for them at the quarry, as last she had heard, they still went there most of the time.

Bev began to walk to the quarry, when she finally arrived she notice the six boys leaning over the edge, all wondering who would go first. Bev saw an opportunity and took it. Before any of the other Losers could say another word, Beverly had stripped down to her underwear and leaped into the quarry below.

"HOLY SHIT!" Said a much lower pitch voice than she was used to, but it was still very clearly Richie 'Trashmouth' Tozier.

Bev collided with the cool water, being fully submerged before coming back up for air. She soon saw another figure plummet into the water and re-emerge next to her. This braver loser was a much taller Bill Denbrough.

"Bev! You're back?" He said in amazement.

Beverly stared at him, entranced in his newfound masculinity, puberty had obviously hid Bill that hardest.

"Yeah" she said after a while "My aunt got a great job offer here so..."

"It's so great to see you!" He said before Beverly heard six more splashes in the water. She turned around to find another girl swimming alongside the Losers. She was slim, yet athletic looking and clearly an experienced swimmer, beating the rest of the Losers over to where Bill and I were. Her Brown hair draped at her shoulders.

"Bill, who is this?" She asked in a tone that could be taken as quite stuck up.

"Oh, Audra is this Beverly" He explained "Beverly this is Audra, the newest member of the Losers club".
